

Millions of American Students Seek Sugar Daddies to Afford College

Student loan debt in the United States is increasing at an alarming rate—quadrupling from the year 2004 to 2017. Meanwhile, Education Secretary Betsy DeVos is seemingly waging war against tens of thousands of student loan borrowers. Rather than look to Washington for relief, more than two million students are turning to Sugar Daddies and Sugar Mommies.

Las Vegas - March 11, 2019

The number of college graduates carrying student loan debt is higher than those who are employed full-time. Instead of waiting to see if a new administration might bring relief after the 2020 elections, an increasing number of students are counting on wealthy benefactors to help fund their education.

SeekingArrangement is releasing its annual findings on the “Fastest Growing Sugar Baby Schools.” Over 2.5 million of the 20 million members on the world’s largest Sugar Daddy dating site are American college students.

The average yearly cost of tuition and fees at a public, four-year institution has more than doubled since 2001 to $9,510, according to the College Board. Factoring in room and board, which can cost more than tuition itself, it’s no wonder that 44 million Americans are being crushed by the weight of debt.

With an average monthly allowance of $3,000, student Sugar Babies can pay off tuition in about three months, leaving many with the ability to focus on achieving an education.

"Over the past three administrations, the overall cost of attending college has more than doubled. Students are tired of hearing politicians campaign on the importance of education, job growth, and opportunity-just to leave promises on the convention floor," says Brandon Wade, Founder and CEO of SeekingArrangement. "The numbers speak for themselves. Of the four million students on SeekingArrangement, more than 62 percent attend college in the US."
